NewsHour Weekend will join PBS' trusted lineup of news and public affairs shows starting Saturday, September 7. The new 30-minute program, which will air Saturdays & Sundays at 6 pm on WFYI 1 Public Television, will be anchored by PBS NewsHour's senior correspondent Hari Sreenivasan and originate from WNET's Tisch Studios in New York.

Each weekend broadcast will feature original, in-depth field reporting on topics including education, healthcare, the economy, energy, science, technology, religion, finance and the arts. PBS NewsHour Weekend will employ a team of multimedia producers who will efficiently utilize the latest broadcast technology. Social media will be fully integrated into the program, allowing for dynamic conversation with viewers.

Additionally, on Monday, September 9, Gwen Ifill and Judy Woodruff will officially begin their new duties as co-anchors and managing editors for the PBS NewsHour. It marks the first time that a network broadcast has had a female co-anchor team. Ifill and Woodruff will anchor the broadcast together Monday through Thursday each week. On Fridays, Woodruff will anchor solo as Ifill hosts Washington Week that evening. The PBS NewsHour can be seen weekdays at 6 pm on WFYI 1 and 7 pm on WFYI 3.
